Eric Snyder's first game as a head coach in the Mohawk Bowl will hardly be his first taste of the rivalry.

His ties with University High go all the way back to 2002, when he was a volunteer assistant with the Hawks, who just happened to meet Morgantown High in the state playoffs that season.

"They had beaten us pretty good in the Mohawk Bowl that year, but we were in a close game in the fourth quarter in the playoffs at their place," Snyder began.

It was the midway point of the fourth quarter, as the Hawks began driving down the field for a possible go-ahead score.

"And then the lights just went out," Snyder re-recalled. "Something blew and it was just dark."

A long delay followed, and by the time the lights came back on at Pony Lewis Field, UHS had lost its momentum.

A few plays later, Morgantown High came up with an interception, moved on to the next round and eventually beat Parkersburg South for the 2002 state championship.

"Yeah, I'm not sure if anyone ever really found out how it happened," Snyder said. "It just felt like very odd timing to have the power go out."

Welcome to the Morgantown High-University High rivalry, which will celebrate the 31st Mohawk Bowl at 7 p.m. Friday, at Pony Lewis Field.

"It is a special atmosphere when the two get together," said MHS head coach Sean Biser, who is 3-1 against UHS during his tenure with the Mohigans. "You look around and the stands are packed. When you get all the students in there, they're fired up. It's just different from most any other game."

Snyder and the Hawks (4-4) will travel across town as the underdog, as the Mohigans (6-3) are battling for the right to host a first-round playoff game.

MHS has its power running game. The Hawks will air it out.

Those game plans have been practiced all week, which is maybe the time period that's the biggest key to any rivalry game.

"As a coach, you never try to oversell the situation the week leading up to the game," Biser said. "You have to try and keep things as normal as possible."

"You can't get everyone too excited and then they have no juice left once you get to Friday."

Snyder, in his rookie season after taking over for longtime coach John Kelley this season, feels the same way.

Yet it's tricky.

"What you run into is the guys know when that scout-team offense is representing Morgantown High," he said. "You can keep your routines the same, but they already know this is a special week. It'll never feel the same to the players."

And so now we take you into the most sacred of moments between a head coach and his players: The pre-game speech.

The Mohawk Bowl is just moments away from kicking off. Biser is staring at his players in the MHS locker room. Snyder is doing the same with the Hawks.

"I wing it," Snyder said. "After all the pre-game, my assistants know I take a few minutes to psych myself up, and they know to just leave me be."

"Then I go in to talk to the team and the emotion and words just come out."

Biser said he was more of a read-the-room type of guy.

"I'll maybe have a few notes written down, things I want to go over," he said. "If we had a good week of practice and I feel like we're already pretty focused, I may not say a whole lot."

"If it wasn't a good week, then I may get a little bit fired up. Sometimes you've got to get fired up, but by Friday night, the hay is already in the barn. Either your guys are ready to go or they're not."

MHS freshman Maddox Twigg is showing maturity beyond his years

Young quarterback continues to take steps forward in becoming an impact player

BY MICHAEL GRIFFITH

Sports@DominionPost.com

Seeing the playing field as a freshman playing varsity is something high school athletes all hope to have the opportunity to do when they become members of any respective team at their school.

Occasionally, freshmen are poised to impact the roster and help their team win games from day one. Such is the case with Morgantown High freshman quarterback Maddox Twigg, who has fit right in for MHS head coach Sean Biser and his offense.

Twigg, who moved to Morgantown with his family this summer, says he enjoys being a student and athlete at a school with the history that MHS holds.

"I've loved being here, honestly," Twigg said. "Morgantown is one of those schools everyone knows about, and there is a history of success here.

I've enjoyed my teammates and coaches. We have another quarterback, Alex Himes, who is a senior, and it may be easy to think we are competing, but in reality, he is a huge reason I've been able to come in and help make an impact. Alex pushes me, holds me accountable every day, and we help each other improve our own game and each other's game."

The 6-foot-2, 195-pound quarterback broke out in Week 8 with 168 yards on the ground on 14 carries and a touchdown to help lead the Mohigans to a massive victory on the road against Parkersburg South 28-14.

What makes Twigg's immediate production for MHS even more impressive is that he sustained a slight knee injury during a preseason scrimmage that sidelined him for several weeks. He didn't debut for the Mohigans until Week 5 this season against Buckhannon-Upshur on September 27 as he rushed for 64 yards on seven attempts and his first career touchdown in his first game for MHS.

"I had a great recovery after my injury and worked hard to get back in shape," he said. "But during that time I kept pace studying the plays and watching film with my team and coaches. I stayed on top of all that mentally so that I wouldn't hurt my team by doing the wrong things or calling the wrong plays when I was healthy. Again, my teammates and coaches helped me so much."

At only 14 years old, Twigg's maturity is his ability to learn beyond the playbook and the X's and O's. As a quarterback, Maddox cites understanding personnel as a key to his quick success with his team.

"Knowing the way certain players on our team play and where they are their best is something I've been paying attention to," he said. "How they play, how they think, how they go about every down. How our receivers think during their routes and who is the fastest or who likes to run where. I'm learning about the offensive line daily, their strengths, and where they tend to open the field up for our offense. There are so many things I try to pay attention to when it comes to my teammates and who they are as players."

Twigg has helped the Mohigans secure a solid position in the Class AAAA playoff standings, which gives them a chance to host a first-round playoff game.

"We had a rough couple of weeks but responded well," he said. "We know how talented our team is, and having a game in front of our home crowd in the playoffs would be special to our team and our school. We have found our stride recently and have the chance to do something special with the rest of our season."

Jimmy Gregg has raised nearly $7,000 to fight childhood cancer

BY MICHAEL GRIFFITH
Sports@DominionPost.com

University football junior punter Jimmy Gregg has some extra motivation behind his right leg this season, thanks to his role in the crucially important fight against childhood cancer.

The 6-foot-1, 195-pound specialist became a member of Kohl's Champions in association with the Alex's Lemonade Stand foundation for childhood cancer before the 2024 season after a strong showing at Kohl's National Scholarship Camp in July.

"I finished ranked in the top five at Kohl's Scholarship Camp this summer, and I was asked about becoming a Kohl's Champion to join the campaign this season," Gregg said. "It was a no-brainer for me. I have family and friends who have been affected by cancer, so I'm glad I have the opportunity to do something as important as helping raise funding for childhood cancer."

Through Alex's Lemonade campaign, Gregg raises funds with one-time donations and pledges based on a certain amount of money being donated per yard that he gains with each punt during the 2024 season.

Jimmy says his goal coming into the 2024 football season was to raise $3,500 in support of the cause. Even with three weeks of the regular season left, he's nearly doubled that amount already, with $6,622 (through Week 7).

"This has been a great way to connect with people who have been affected or are currently fighting cancer," he said. "Not long ago, I heard of someone close to my age who lost their battle, and that helped open my eyes to realize that I'm doing something more than just playing football."

So far this season, Gregg has punted 31 times and gained nearly 1200 gross yards. Nine of his punts have gone inside the 20-yard line.

Being able to use his ability to punt for something as impactful as Alex's Lemonade Stand campaign is an experience Jimmy says he knew he wouldn't take for granted.

"It's honestly been a bit humbling for me," he said. "Not many young people my age have an opportunity to do something like this, especially with the ability I've been given to play football. I've already raised close to $7,000 for the campaign, but I see this as something I will continue to do in the future when I get to playing in college as well."

Gregg holds scholarship offers from Fairmont State and WVU and may even be one of the top specialist targets for the Mountaineers in the 2026 class.

"It means everything to me to be able to play in my hometown and possibly share an alma mater with the best punter to play the game," he said. "And growing up as a fan was a surreal experience."

While Gregg knows how much of an inspiration he is to others, he acknowledges how much he's been inspired by being involved with the campaign.

"It allows me to feel more human than just a football player," he said. "It makes me want to work harder thinking about it during practice and games. The continual motivation I get from knowing that there's a deeper meaning behind every punt I send into the air is a bonus to knowing I'm positively impacting something so important."

KEYS TO THE GAME

MHS PASSING/UHS PASS DEFENSE:

Although the Mohigans are known for their run-heavy style of offense and have remained true to that, for the most part, this season, both of their quarterbacks, Alex Himes and Maddox Twigg, can air it out and send the ball downfield.

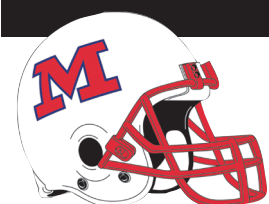

The Hawks have allowed an average of 105.9 yards through the air so far this season, but they have shown signs of a solid secondary with guys like Hayden George, Shawn Carter and Glenn Brown and have athletes at linebacker who can stay with the MHS receivers over the middle.

MORGANTOWN WINS IF:

- MHS wins the turnover battle in the game
- A.J. Thomas rushes for more than 125 yards
- Time of possession heavily favors MHS

MHS RUSHING/UHS RUN DEFENSE:

The Mohigans have been one of the better-rushing attacks over the previous few weeks of the season, with A.J. Thomas and Twigg making a lot of noise out of the backfield. MHS ran for 390 yards against Parkersburg South two weeks ago and could have another massive night on Baker's Ridge.

While the Hawks have a strong middle of their defense led by Brock Kehler at linebacker, they are allowing 163 yards per game to their opponents and will have to stop one of the more elite ground games they'll see in MHS.

UHS RUSHING/MHS RUN DEFENSE:

University freshman tailback Brody Kehler has shown flashes of what he can do as a ball carrier this season, averaging 4.7 yards on 60 carries. But the Hawks have a young offensive line this season who still lack some game experience.

The Mohigans bring some experience throughout their defense, including a line with seasoned players in seniors Akir Johnson and Brady Savage that could give the UHS backfield some problems in the contest.

UHS PASSING/MHS PASS DEFENSE:

The Hawks have enjoyed a breakout season from George in 2024. He leads UHS with 378 yards on 25 catches and four touchdowns. If UHS can't get the run game going, quarterback Harrison Helbig will play a significant role as the primary thrower. He has thrown for five touchdowns with just one interception in 2024.

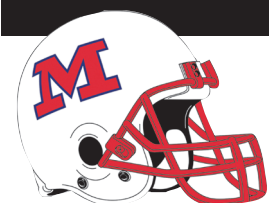

MHS has been banged up in its secondary recently and allowed 174 yards to Parkersburg South two weeks ago. The Hawks' passing attack could give the Mohigans a problem if UHS can connect on some big plays.

UNIVERSITY WINS IF:

- Brock Kehler and the defense can penetrate the backfield
- UHS throws for more than 200 yards
- The Hawks can shut down one of either Maddox Twigg or A.J. Thomas

SPECIAL TEAMS:

This is probably the closest matchup between the two sides, as both clubs boast Division-I specialists prospects in Aidan Stire of Morgantown and Jimmy Gregg from University.

Stire, who has committed to kick for West Virginia next fall, can change the game in any contest for Morgantown. He has already connected on a field goal of over 40 yards this season. He can also help the Mohigans in the punt game if needed.

Gregg, who is nationally ranked as a punter in the 2026 class, has placed nine of his 31 attempts this season inside the opponent's 20-yard line. UHS will welcome him in hindering the field position of the MHS offense whenever possible.

Beauty of UHS-MHS rivalry is in the fantastic stories

What is true or false depends on which school is telling the tale

JUSTIN JACKSON

Maybe the best part of any rivalry is no one seems to get the story straight.

One side believes this. The other side believes that. And so the stories get told from two different perspectives, each containing a little bit of truth and maybe a lot of stretched imagination.

If anyone were to do a deep dive into the Morgantown High-University High rivalry, which kicks back up Friday night with the annual Mohawk Bowl, the first thing that person would have to know is there are very few undisputed facts, but a lot of facts based on who is telling the story.

We'll give you an example from the old days when the Mohawk Bowl was still played at Milan Puskar Stadium.

The story goes that Morgantown High is in its locker room before the start of the game when, all of a sudden, banging and shouting is heard outside of the locker room door.

On the other side — supposedly — is former University High standout Bryan Golden, who is basically challenging the entire Morgantown High roster to come outside and meet him for a little pregame, ahem, meeting of the minds.

Now, you can ask any Morgantown High veteran and that story is completely true.

Ask someone who has been around a while at University High, and you'll get 100 reasons why that never happened.

We take you to the 2002 state playoffs, when the two schools met in the second round, at Pony Lewis Field.

It's a close game and we're in the middle of the fourth quarter.

The Hawks are on a drive that could put them in the lead.

Suddenly there is a small explosion behind the end zone on the side where the locker rooms now sit.

Sparks fly out of a breaker box and the stadium goes completely dark.

Now, did a MHS student or fan break into that electric box, jam a quarter or a paper clip into it and short out the entire stadium?

That's the theory you'll get from the University High side, as far fetched as it may seem.

Forget the fact, if that's exactly what happened, that the person would be risking electrocution by doing so.

That kind of common sense has no place in this cross-town rivalry.

Was it unfortunate timing? You bet, especially when you throw in the fact that UHS threw an interception a few plays after power was restored and the Mohigans moved on.

We can keep going. There was a Morgantown High fumble in the Mohawk Bowl one year that rolled into the back of the end zone.

It was recovered by an MHS player near the out-of-bounds boundary.

If the refs would have ruled that player out of bounds, it's a touchback and UHS gets the ball.

If he was ruled in bounds, then it's a touchdown that puts the game out of reach for the Mohigans.

Of course all the refs had to get together and meet about the decision for a solid three minutes, which only built up the anticipation.

In the end, the refs cheated the Hawks — their version, not exactly mine — because they ruled it a touchdown for MHS.

In the end, the real story behind the Mohawk rivalry is the absolute fantastic and wild stories and memories it creates.

It has all the classic elements, beginning with the big brother-little brother feuding.

For so many years — and this goes back way before my time — that was the perception across the entire city.

MHS was the big giant school with all of the advantages. UHS was smaller and always felt like it was being looked down upon.

adjustments.

Each time McNew asked if UHS was sending two guys to a gap, they replied yes. The next gap, same thing.

"I guess we know the secret now," McNew said. "They're playing 14 guys on defense."

Here's another half-time story about former UHS head coach John Kelley.

The Hawks were a huge underdog in the 1998 Mohawk Bowl, but held the lead at the break.

Kelley is pacing back and forth in the locker room. He looks up and down, but never says a single word.

This goes on until the final seconds before the team has to go back onto the field.

Finally, Kelley looks at his players and screams, "Just keep doing what you're doing."

The Hawks did and pulled off the Mohawk Bowl upset that season.

There were at least 20,000 fans that filled the lower bowl of Milan Puskar Stadium for the 1999 Mohawk Bowl.

That was a scene that will never be forgotten. It was a great game, too, played between two undefeated teams that season, but the atmosphere of the crowd that night was absolutely unbelievable.

And, to a certain degree, the UHS-MHS rivalry can be unbelievable, too.

Regardless of which side is telling the story, chances are it's going to be a great one.

Over the years, of course, the enrollments became more equal, but that didn't exactly change the perceptions, according to the University High faithful.

The bitter side to the rivalry is it isn't exactly a Civil War. These are kids who would likely be hanging out together on a Friday night if they didn't have a football game to get to.

It wouldn't matter that one reps the Blue and Red and the other Red and Gold. There is no my side of town and your side; no bridge that one side fears to cross.

The Mohawk Bowl, itself, has proven it can be three hours of chaos and confusion.

This story was once told to me by former MHS head coach Glen McNew.

It's halftime at the 2000 Mohawk Bowl, and the game is tied 7-7.

McNew is talking with his offensive linemen looking to make some
