Toy sales steady

Consumers are helping the toy industry fend off gloomy sales numbers.

Global toy sales for this year reached $36.7 billion in September, a 2% spike from the same period last year, according to the market research firm NPD Group. That number represents a 30% jump compared to 2019, the period before the COVID-19 pandemic.

"Unlike many other categories which grew tremendously during the pandemic and then saw sales drop dramatically post-COVID, the global toy market continues to perform and maintain an elevated level of sales," said Frédérique Tutt, a global toys industry analyst at NPD.

Some countries are helping with the spike more than others. Brazil and Mexico, for example, have seen toy revenue spike 23% and 13%, respectively, partly driven by sales of merchandise for the upcoming World Cup tournament in Qatar, according to the firm.

Sales numbers are also up in the U.S. and Canada, but have declined in some European countries, NPD found. Germany and the United Kingdom, for example, have seen a 5% dip while sales in Belgium are down 7%.

Plush toys are enjoying the highest growth in the category, NPD notes, followed by action figures and accessories.

Play time: Toy sales are up 2% this year, with most of the world gaining. Some western European countries have seen sales dip slightly.

CompanySpotlight Toast is jammin'

Toast popped Friday after the maker of restaurant software posted strong third-quarter sales and raised its sales outlook for the year.

Toast recorded sales of $752 million in the period, a 55% increase over the same quarter last year, easily beating Wall Street targets of $720 million. Toast, which makes software for restaurants that encompasses customer ordering, kitchen displays, analytics and other uses, grew its locations served to 74,000, a year-over-year increase of more than 40%.

"At a time when restaurants need a trusted technology partner more than ever, we remain focused on helping our customers drive efficiency, grow their business and continue to successfully adapt to the dynamic operating environment," said CEO Chris Comparato.

Toast now expects 2022 revenue of up to $2.72 billion, up from a previous top range of $2.66 billion.
